11. Read the following text and answer the questions given below.

An ancient banyan which had grown through the cracks of an abandoned building was the only tree, in the street known as Gai Nath. Little Ramu’s kite had caught in its branches. The boy, barefoot and clad only in a torn shirt, ran along the cobbled stones of the narrow street to where his grandfather sat, nodding dreamily in the sunshine of their back courtyard.

“Grandfather! ‘shouted the boy. The kite has gone!” The old man woke from his daydreaming with a start. He raised his head, displaying a white beard.

‘Did the twine break? he asked. “I know that kite twine is not what it used to be”

‘No, grandfather, the kite is stuck in the banyan tree”

The old man chuckled. “You have yet to learn how to fly a kite properly, my child. But I am too old to teach you and that’s the pity of it. Now you shall have another.” He had just finished making a new kite from bamboo, paper and thin silk, and it lay in the sun. It was a pale pink kite, with a small green tail. The old man handed it to Ramu. The boy raised himself on his toes and kissed his grandfather’s hollowed – out cheek. “I will not lose this one”, he said. “This kite will fly like a bird.” He turned on his heels and skipped out of the courtyard.

The old man remained dreaming in the sun. His kite – shop had gone, the premises having been sold many years ago to a junk dealer. But he still, made kited for his own amusement and as playthings for his grandson, Ramu. Not many people bought kites these days. Adults disdained them and children preferred to spend their money at the movies. Moreover, there were very few open spaces left for flying kites. The city had swallowed up the green field which had stretched from the old fort walls to river – bank.

The old man could remember a time when grown ups flew kites in the field, the kites swerving and swooping in the sky, tangling with each other, until the string of one was cut. Then the beaten but liberated kite would float away into the blue unknown.

Kite flying was then a favourite sport. The old man remembered how villagers would gather in the river bank, to join in this pastime. In those days there was time to spend an idle hour with a gay, dancing strip of paper. Now everyone hurried in a heat of hope. Delicate things like kites and dreams were trampled underfoot.
